This month's question and answer:

) My Ex-husband, and the father of our two kids, is going through some really hard times right now and isn't making the best decisions. I still love this man and want to save him from going down an unhealthy path. Will he get his life straight and will he ever come back to me after 3 years apart?

He is a procrastinator and he is so because he is afraid of making changes. His current life choices and lifestyle result in destructions of friendships and keep him in a state of unclear thinking.

He is afraid to face his demons and therefore engages in activities that cloud his mind. In order for him to straighten out his life, he needs to reject the idea that he is without hope, and he needs to look at cleaning up his act. Unfortunately he is going to have to hit bottom before he can start back up.

When he was with you, he chose to ignore and resent your ideas, suggestions and or your help. You can not help him now because he will continue to ignore any suggestions that sound like “you know better”. The best thing you can do is tell him exactly how you feel and let him sit with it for a while.

In regard to the two of you reconnecting, this is always up to the individuals involved to make these choices. We believe that he will eventually see his mistakes and take responsibility for them but we also see that he will continue to blame you for what he sees as things done “to him” . He has a very hard time recognizing his own faults.

You sacrificed a lot of time and caring towards this individual, and you also may have at times been “instructive” which he may resent. What is important for you to realize is that only time and self-actualization will help him. In the meantime you need to see yourself as a whole person who can accomplish and has accomplished a lot on her own.

PLEASE SEND IN YOUR QUESTION FOR NEXT MONTH'S NEWSLETTER!!
