Followers of a religious cult will come under scrutiny when it is discovered that children are being forced to work and are being indoctrinated into the religion at an early age.

The First Lady will begin a campaign against drunk drivers. She will become a powerful spokesperson for MADD and will work to change the legal alcohol level/driving limits. This will take place after President Bush leaves office.

There will be conflict between three closely bordered Asian countries. The conflict will in turn create discord between Russia and the United States.

Oil profits will rise right before the November 7th elections. This will prompt the public to vote for conservation-minded politicians and propositions.

Governor Schwarzenegger will align himself with the "right-wing democracy"- those who espouse democratic and fair methods of immigration control in their public voice but in truth have a hidden agenda. The Governor will continue to campaign for "freedom of commerce" as this will in reality mean benefits for the oil and fuel companies who continue to support and finance his political campaign.

We are beginning to sense a change in the political views of the population of the United States. The increased awareness of women's rights, especially those in danger of being taken away, will be addressed by the next administration. In addition the governmental structure will change somewhat in nature. Smaller governmental structures in the individual states and cities will see a large influx of diverse voices. The "old guard" will undergo a shake-up. Political power will shift to the "left". In states where the "right" is strong, women will form large groups and will infiltrate the powers that be.

There will be more shocking evidence of mishandled funds, primarily stocks, in the corporate world. This will occur in companies dealing with minerals, combustion, and solar power.

Conservationists will set up blockades or boycotts against timber mining along the Appalachian Mountains in deeply forested areas.

President Bush will cede his power earlier than expected due to upsets in the White House. He will lose important constituents when the mishandling of private funds is revealed. In addition, two top appointees in the Supreme Court will retire.

The next ten years will prove to be an excellent time for planting and regrowth in underdeveloped climate zones of the United States using new farming tools and technology. "Underwater farms" may be a door to future production of viable food.

There will be an increase in the productivity of impoverished countries. This will be accomplished by linking these regions with "mega countries"; those that overproduce-and an exchange of goods and services between the two countries will balance supply and demand for both nations.

China will increase its arsenal of nuclear weapons. The US and France will meet with Chinese officials to establish guidelines and safe level standards.

There will be several young artists, including composers, musicians and media artists that will collaborate to create international understanding and communication among youth. "Art Speaks" will give youth of all nations a common language and will break down barriers and prejudice, especially prejudice against and misunderstanding of Middle East culture and spirituality.

Senator McCain will run for president in 2008. Hilary Clinton wants to keep her opportunities open. She will not want to alienate the African-American population by working against Senator Barack Obama. Regardless of results in the presidential race, she will ask Obama to join forces with her in a combined political platform. A senator from Mississippi will cause an upset in the political arena, especially among the Republicans.

Congress will overrule Bush in all immigration policies. Taxes will increase by 3% to cover "fringe benefits" for youth and seniors that will add to their health benefits and financial security.

Gathering forces in Iran will create a stand off against the United Nations and the United States. President Bush will send troops to Iran. The reaction nationwide will foreshadow the end of an era of militancy and will in effect be the "last straw" or stimulus for the penultimate rejection of current military/foreign policy in the United States.

Two leading senators from Midwestern states will publicly refute mishandling of political slush funds. The ensuing controversy will lead to a reversal of the political climate from conservatism to more radical views.

The government in Iraq will collapse. The Iranian influence in the collapse will be evident. There will be new political elections in which the majority of the population will vote for a leader who is currently connected to a minority party. We believe the number of American troops in Iraq will be reduced 75-95 percent by June 2007.

Scientists, especially those who are involved in brain cancer research will reveal new techniques of decreasing cancer cells through light/fiber optic technology.

Stem cell research will increase by 55 percent. Everyone, especially newborns and senior citizens, will benefit from results of the new studies.

Changes in tidal patterns will indicate seasonal weather characteristics are in a state of transition. Within 10-20 years, yearly calendars and seasonal indicators will be adjusted according to the new cycle of changes in the weather.

Fires in New England and Maine will be caused by defective iron ore factory mishaps, most likely late fall.

Probable chance of increased rainfall along northern border of United States will create rapid flooding early this winter Canadian provinces will also be affected.

We believe there will be a startling revelation about life forms appearing on other distant planets. The forms will be encased in an amber-like substance. The sense we are getting is that these life forms are in a deceased state and have been placed there in a burial process. It will be discovered that the deceased life forms found on these distant planets inhabited planets that are located much closer to the earth.

Militant protests in Afghanistan will lead to changes in the political regime.

President Obama will sign into law a bill that promotes “healthy living” and or wellness. It will among other things, provide supplemental or “voucher” type emergency coverage for the homeless and needy.

Fierce storms in Midwest will shut down electrical power and communication grids. Due to this storm and its aftereffects, there is indication that there will be a move towards underground electric/communication lines in the near future.

Former President Jimmy Carter will begin a series of lectures and development programs to connect youth and the elderly in self-help programs.

New legislation will enforce stricter limits on emission levels of oil and other fossil fuels.

First Lady Michelle Obama will speak about women’s roles in politics and will emphasize that women have had to deal with prejudice in society. She will work to open doors for underprivileged women and give all women the ways and means to achieve their goals and aspirations.
